HISTORY OF THE FIRST CHRISTMAS LIGHTS

In 1879, Thomas Edison invented the first practical light bulb; but it wasn't until 1882 when Edward Johnson, an associate of Edison's, created the first string of Christmas lights by hand wiring 80 red, white, and blue bulbs together in a string. The creation of the first string of electric Christmas lights didn't replace the candles on Christmas trees very quickly however - very few people saw that first string of lights. Christmas lights wouldn't truly see the light of day until 1895, when President Grover Cleveland first put lights on the White House Christmas tree. The prohibitive cost and equipment required to power those early strings of lights limited their use to larger department stores and the White House until 1903. In 1903, the first strings of Christmas lights were sold to the masses. By 1905, Christmas light sets with small screw-in bulbs and a socket plug or battery packs, were becoming a Christmas mainstay. These early lights evolved into the Christmas lights that you know and love today.

Both indoor Christmas lights and outdoor Christmas lights offer a soothing, steady glow or the blink and twinkle resembling stars or dancing candlelight. If you want your lights to dance, simply replace a steady bulb in your string with the blinking bulb, included with your lights. If you want a steady, mystical glow cast over your yard and house, try LED lights. Colored LED lights glow with an almost neon-like quality, while the simple white LED lights cast an icy, ethereal glow wherever they hang. No matter your preference, Christmas lights are a "must have" for your holiday decorating - so string up those lights and shine on!
